Welcome to the Brandeis Institutional Repository, established in 2008. The Brandeis Institutional Repository is a resource for the Brandeis community to showcase, organize, share, and preserve research and scholarship in an Open Access repository.

Why deposit in an institutional repository?

- Research and creative works are more widely available, increasing scholarly communication
- Contributors are assured of a digital repository with permanent URLs
- Long term preservation of scholarly output in a wide range of formats is assured
- Brandeis research and education are showcased in one location

Organization of the Brandeis Institutional Repository:

The content is organized in 'communities' that reflect the academic and administrative structure of Brandeis University. For example, the community for the School of Arts and Sciences has 'sub-communities' for each department and program. Within the communities or sub-communities, 'collections' of works can be organized by research group, individual faculty members, content type or other logical groupings that meet the community's need.
